Abortion is one of the most contentious issues in American politics, but the most recent polls show that most voters fall somewhere between the extremes. This has led some to suggest that Democrats need a more nuanced view of abortion to win back the electorate. As the 2008 presidential race to the White House gets into full swing this international panel will examine:

- Why is abortion such an important issue in electoral politics in the US compared to Europe?
- What's so bad about abortion?
- Why do women need the right to abortion?
- Should we seek a middle ground?
- Which 2008 presidential candidates, if any, will defend the right to abortion?

The NY Salon (www.nysalon.org) aims to raise the level of discussion of our culture – from politics and business to science and the arts. We seek to provide environments in which ideas can be robustly debated among critically-minded people from a variety of backgrounds. Whatever the forum – discussing a novel, arguing the merits of a museum exhibition, or organizing a public debate – our goal is the same: to ensure that the assumptions underlying the pressing issues of the day are thoroughly examined.
